WHERLING, W. VA., NOVEMBER 24, 1883.

It is suspected that Mr. Watterson has opened himself out in New York in the hope of driving votes from Randall and making Carlisle, the Kentucky man Speaker of the House. What ever may be his object the high aim of Mr. Watterson's life is to break down the protective tariff-"the robber tariff," as he calls it. Mr. Watterson is fluent with torque and pen. His productions sound well and read well but he is very unfortucate in some of his tries, not against them—for the right to compete with Great Britisan in the colonial market. It was an early grievance which grew no better with time.

In 1717 it was colonnal and very truthful.

In 1732, in obedience to an order of the House of Commons the Board of Trade and Plantations inquired into the affairs of the colonies and made the horrible discovery (previouslymale by British exporters) that i i Ne v York, New England, Pennsylvania, and Maryland they "had fallen into the manufacture" of woolen and linen cloth; that they were producing and working up flax and hemp; that they had established woolen mills; that they were making "brown hollands for women's wear," and hats and leather; that they had set up a paper mill, six iron furnaces and nineteen ges, a slitting mill, "a manufactory for nails" and more of that generally depraved character, and measures were passed to put a stop to it all in the interest of British anufacturers-protection on that side of

THE WHISPERING GALLERY.

A friend of mine who is a reporter-just plain, common, everyday reporter-tells me that twice as much might have been said about the Bazaar without saying half said about the Bazaar without saying hall that it deserved; and that he wouldn't put through four more nights of it for a five per cent increase of his already exorbitant salary. Between people who didn't like what he wrote about them and people who were deeply touched by what he didn't write about them, he says his life was made a wild delirium of ecstatic misery. I have always thought that the newspaper reporter ought to have wings and twang a harp.

You must have noticed that there were many elegant costumes at the Bezzar. These things represent money; the money These things represent money; the money came out of the pockets of the good people who wore them, and it was paid willingly, I am sure. Now don't you know that there were people who spent ten dellars and a good deal more, and gave their time, and spent money at the booths, and went home tired, who would not have contributed five dollars directly into the treasury of the Banevolents? Observe the knowledge of human nature displayed by the ladies. It was the social feature that caught.

dustrict. He said:

As I recall it, there was a Pigh Priest of Protection on the other side of the Atlantic who clismed the richt to give bounties and levy taxes with a willful regard for the interests of the many. As is not often the case, the many had the sme and courage to organize and caurage to organize and caurage to organize and caurage to organize and caurage to organize and do, monopoly went down before them. In a word, the war of the revolution was a great regenue reform movement, and the triumph with which it ended a victory for commercial, no less than National freedom.

This may be accepted at par by anyone who does not know or has forgotten the early history of his country—the bitter siruggle of the colonies for a chance to live. It is true that the triumph was "a victory for commercial, no less than for National, reedom;" but the fight in so far as it was or commercial, no less than for National, reedom;" but the fight in so far as it was or commercial, no less than for National, reedom;" but the fight in so far as it was or commercial ilberty, was for home industice, not significant the colonial arket. If these signs, together with the warm weather we have recently mad, not not indications that the coming winter will be mild, I would refer you to Vennor or some other liar.

I learn that the German of 1882-3 contemplates again celebrating New Year's day with an afternoon German and invitday with an afternoon German and inviting a number of friends to participate. Lest year the afternoon German, you will remember, was one of the seciety events of the senson. No doubt it is a very agreeable way of celebrating, but I do hope the pleasant custom of making and receiving calls will not be entirely abandoned, and that the ladies in a quiet way will keep open house, at least during the evening. I want to call.

I am in favor of compulsary education. I believe that all children of school age, of whatever station in life, should be commanufacturers—protection on that side of the ocean, prohibition on this. It was Lord Coblam who said that the colonists should not make so much as a horse-nail. In 1750 it was made a penalty of from £200 to £500 to put up or operate an iron mill in the colonies.

This imperfect and hastily sketched outline will serve to show what kind of commercial freedom the colonies fought for and what kind of a victory it was that they won. It was not a fight against "protected monopolista" at home, but against "pro-

The McColloch case reminds me of the disappearance from Cleveland in 1879 of perons business, an old man with a lovely family to whom he was much attached, and a ripe scholar and good citizen. His case was a marvelous one, truly, and will, no doubt, recur to many of my readers. He was as well known in Cleveland as Clerk history, and that they could never discover his deception.

Since so accomplished an advocate of free trade calls up the matter it is in order to direct special attention to the effort of Great Britain to crush the colonial industrier; and to remind Americans that Great listory from an article in an eastern mediatory from a was a marvelous one, truly, and will, no ory from an article in an cal journal.

I don't think I ever heard of as peculiar an instance of mental aberation as that of enough to protect its interests; that three millions of consumers have grow to nearly sixty millions; that the few forbidden forges and mills have developed into a vast industrial system the wonder of the world.

If these American industries could be stricken down and this great market thrown open to the labor and capital of England—if we could once more be commercially enslaved—it would matter little Mr. Case. He averred most positively that
